Following the adoption of the new Cohesion Alliance, Partenia wishes to shed light on the crucial significance of allowing the Cohesion and NEXTGeneration funds to reach less densely populated areas if the EU is to reach the lofty and ambitious goal of “not leaving anyone behind”. Indeed, the cohesive and balanced development of European territories is key to ensuring both a shared prosperity and the positive outlook of citizens on the European project/future of the EU.

The recent sanitary crisis has accelerated the trend of moving back to such areas. Modern TIC have fortunately made it possible to live and thrive professionally in rural areas thanks to the EU’s commitment to ensuring the installation and maintenance of quality TIC infrastructures. Facilitating the access to Cohesion funds for local SMEs, entrepreneurs and Local Intermediate Authorities with their proven capacity to see to it that EU funds are adequately allocated to ensure their most efficient possible use remains instrumental in achieving the goals set out in the Cohesion Policy.

Attracting tourists to these areas can also pave the way for more sustainable tourism practices and help in the deseasonalisation process aimed both at stabilising the influx of tourists even during the low seasons and thus maintain the need for employment throughout the year and at mitigating the effects of mass tourism on urban centers and coastal areas.

Indeed, these areas are often home to some of our most precious patrimony and keepers of European multisecular traditions and ways of living that represent an undeniable touristic appeal.

Finally, the agricultural sector is in dire need of not only financial means to lead the way towards more sustainable practices via the successful implementation of the “farm to the fork” strategy but also of recognition as the backbone of a healthy European society that places the well-being of its citizens at the top of its priority list.

Presidents of Local Intermediate Authorities from the various Member States, stakeholders involved in the revitalisation of less densely populated areas, regional presidents and high representatives of the European Institutions will share their visions and debate on how to guarantee the cohesive development of less densely populated areas.
